

On March 12, 2026, Staff Member A accessed the electronic medical record of Patient #77821 while working a scheduled shift.

Audit logs later showed that Staff Member A was not assigned to the patient's care and had no documented clinical or administrative reason to view the record.

Later that day, Staff Member A discussed the patient's diagnosis and laboratory results with another employee at a shared workstation located in a hallway accessible to patients and visitors.

The discussion could reasonably have been overheard by individuals who were not authorized to receive the information.